I am an XM subscriber and am so not because I have no better use of my money than to spend it on a monthly subscriber fee for the XM service but because XM Satellite Radio, thorough their fresh programing, affords me entertainment choices unavaible to me through standard broadcast radio. This country has found so much success through its innovations. Do not stand in the way of this one. Let's cultivate an environment where regular innovation is the norm.

If XM Satellite Radio service is threatening to broadcast radio it is only because broadcast radio has tended to offer fewer and fewer radio choices. I am a listener (and subscriber) of public radio. My listening (and subscription) practices to Nation Public Radio have not, and will not change, because of satellite radio service. If the disadvantaged public radio network can compete on their own merit with the satellite radio service shouldn't the big corporate radio companies do so as well?
